Underwriter Explanation:

The loan request we're reviewing has been given a CONDITIONAL_APPROVAL decision with a decision confidence of 76.1%. The primary reason for this decision is the borrower's strong credit profile, with a credit score of 718. This is a significant strength, as it indicates the borrower's ability to manage debt and make timely payments.

However, there are some concerns that need to be addressed before we can move forward with the loan. The as-is loan-to-value (LTV) ratio is 121.3%, which is above the typical threshold for a conventional loan. This means that the borrower is putting a significant amount of their own money into the property, which could be a risk if the property's value declines. Additionally, the lender's loan-to-value (LTC) ratio is 90.5%, which is also higher than usual. This could make the loan more susceptible to default if the borrower is unable to make payments.

We also have some document issues that need to be addressed. While there are no missing required documents, there are four other issues that need to be resolved. These issues are related to the completeness of the documentation, which is an important factor in our decision-making process. The top factors influencing our decision are the borrower's credit score, the completeness of the documentation, and the percentage of required documents that are missing.

To move forward with the loan, we need to address the concerns mentioned above. The borrower will need to provide additional documentation to support the loan request, and we will need to review the property's value to ensure that it is sufficient to support the loan amount. Once these conditions are met, we can move forward with the loan.

Quantitative risk score derived from multi-variable Random Forest classifier.
